Burials without Inscriptions

We set out to make a list of people buried in Plymouth for whom we did not find inscriptions in 1983. This task was much more difficult than we expected. The Vital Records from 1900 give the burial place of most persons who died. However, we ran into several obstacles: Some have no burial place given; many give only Plymouth; sometimes people have been placed in the tomb and burial is given as Riverside, but the bodies have been buried elsewhere; sometimes the burial site is not correctly given on the records.

We took each name on the death records and checked against all the cemeteries in town to see if they had inscriptions. From this procedure, we got a list of people without inscriptions. We then checked each name to see if the person had a spouse, child, etc., which was listed and therefore there was a reason to assume they were buried on a given site. We then found we had to check all the cemeteries in the surrounding towns, since we found that some of the people buried as in Riverside or Plymouth had inscriptions in other towns. We checked all cemeteries in Trinity, Ashland, other Holderness cemeteries, Thornton, Campton, Rumney, Ellsworth, Bridgewater, and Foster Cemetery in Wentworth. If we could not find a plausible burial place, we assumed that the burial place listed was correct. We assumed that people listed as being buried in Plymouth who could not be otherwise accounted for were buried in Riverside.

Superintendents of Cemeteries have a partial list of people buried in town who were brought in from other places. Where a person is given on such a list, and cannot be found elsewhere, the entry is starred.

Stillborn children are a special difficulty. In some instances they may have been buried on the hospital lot. In some the fathers acted as undertakers. We have assumed where we can find the parents that the child is buried on that lot. Where we cannot find such evidence, we have assumed the place of burial given is correct.

Cremated persons present another problem. In several instances the superintendents have listed (from 1979 on) where the urn was buried. We have listed cremated persons as being in a cemetery only where there is such proof.

At the end of each cemetery index will be found an alphabetized list of persons we assume to be buried in that cemetery without inscriptions with such information as we can find to identify them. Names are also included in the general index for that cemetery. Death dates have been brought up to date in the text where the birth date was on the stone.

Despite the hours of work involved in this project, one can easily see the possibilities for error. We have done our best and hope the list proves of value in tracing Plymouth families.

There is a row of numbered stones, with no names. We have tried to find a list of persons there. A. R. Hobbs has such a list in his reports as superintendent of cemeteries, but beginning only in 1906. We went through the town reports to see if we could find where the town had paid funeral expenses and for whom. We were only partly successful. Until 1914, the reports usually gave the name of the person for whom expenses were paid, but not after. Some of the persons for whom expenses were paid have inscriptions on other stones and we have excluded them from this list. The list following comprises what we think are the persons buried in the unmarked graves. These names are included in the general index.

1866. Mary Fox, grave and hearse
1868. Mrs Permelia Smith, coffin and cape
1860. Reuben Powers
1881. Gilman Merrill
1882. Fred Burt's child
1881. Frank Braley, his child
1884. John Stewart
1890. David Gould
1911. Austin child
1911. Peter Suriski (grave and marker)
1913. Thomas Crowley
1914. John Graham
